1. The bridge over Sankarabarani on the National Highway between Pondicherry and Villupuram serves both Pondicherry and Tamilnadu areas. It is in great disrepair and it got damaged further in the recent incessant rains. The Principal Engineer, P.W.D., has sent his estimates for a cost of Rs.7.5 crores. He has also worked out the portion of expenditure to be borne by Tamil Nadu Government.

Put up a note for circulation to the Administrator for obtaining his approval to address the adjoining Tamil Nadu Government for getting their consent for sharing their portion of expenditure so that the bridge is repaired for the benefit of both the States without any inordinate delay. It may be explained to Tamil Nadu Government that on getting their share of funds the work will be executed by the P.W.D., Pondicherry, with the periodical inspection by their Engineers.

India's share of world tourism

In 1951, there were about 17,000 tourists who visited India; in 1982 the number went upto 8,60,178. To this total, if we add visitors from Pakistan and Bangladesh, India had 12,88,162 visitors in 1982. But Pakistan and Bangladesh figures are always fluctuating depending upon India's political relations with the two countries. It is in this context that the Department of Tourism, Government of India have been showing the tourists arrivals from these two countries separately. While in 1983, the number of international visitors was 287 million, visitors to India including Pakistanis and Bangladeshis were about 1.3 million. India received only 0.3 per cent of the international tourist traffic in 1982.

As pointed out in an earlier chapter, eighty per cent of international tourist traffic is confined to seventeen developing countries of the world. In 1983, the developing countries of Asia and Africa received less than ten per cent of the tourist arrivals and their share of international tourism receipts was fifteen per cent.

India's official target for tourist arrivals laid down by the Ministry of Tourism and Civil Aviation in the late seventies was 3.5 million visitors by 1990. This is unrealistic and we may be lucky to receive 1.2 million visitors--not including Pakistanis and Bangladeshis by 1990.

Tourist traffic essentially moves from one developed country to another both for pleasure as well as for business. The developing countries are not receiving the maximum benefit from tourism due to various reasons, including their poor image as a holiday destination and inadequate facilities.

The number of tourists visiting a country need not always be the norm by which a country's tourism traffic should be assessed. It is the duration of stay that matters. An American tourist visiting Europe may stay for eighteen days in nine countries. Every time he crosses the border of a country in Europe, he is counted as a tourist. Such tourists may even not be spending any money. They cross borders in cars and trailers; bringing their own camping equipment. They fill up fuel in cars and trailers from their side of the border, bring their own sandwiches and food; pitch their tents at some camping ground in one country, and eat their home-made sandwiches. After a couple of days stay, they go back to their own country again filling up petrol in their tanks from their side of the border. Tourism in Europe is more or less like domestic tourism in India -- people of Punjab going to Kashmir or people of Tamil Nadu travelling for a holiday to Karnataka or Kerala. Thus, numbers can be misleading. If the average stay of a tourist in Hong Kong is three days compared to the average stay in India (twenty-seven days), surely India is deriving greater economic benefit from tourism.

The following are the reasons why tourists in millions do not come to India:

1. Distance: India is located far from the affluent tourist markets of the world. High air-fare is a major constraint.

2. Image: India is not yet known abroad as a holiday country. Its image is essentially that of an exotic country with an ancient history and civilisation as the two main attractions.

3. Facilities: Tourist facilities in India are not adequate and well-developed. There is low hotel capacity, inadequate domestic air-transportation, ground transportation, etc.

4. Non-affluent neighbours: India's neighbours are not rich. Their citizens cannot, therefore, afford to travel abroad. European tourism is basically travel to neighbouring centres.

A country may be host to a large number of thrifty visitors, or a small number of high-spending visitors. But no country (except totalitarian regimes like China and USSR) can determine the kind of tourists it would prefer to welcome. While the number of visitors may be a test of the success, or otherwise, of promotional and marketing efforts of a country, in economic terms what matters is the volume of tourism and foreign exchange receipts derived from them. The volume depends on the average length of stay which, in the case of India, is twenty-seven days, one of the highest in the world.
